

Mediation

Overview

Frequently it is more favorable for our clients and their families to reach an amicable agreement other than to litigate their issues in court. Mediation or other forms of dispute resolution can benefit many couples considering separation or divorce, creating workable parenting plans, simplifying the division of assets and liabilities, and developing agreeable child support and alimony payments.

The Family Law attorneys at Kelley Kronenberg have extensive mediation training and experience to assist clients in preparing for, and participating in, the mediation process. The primary goal of our mediation services is to help our clients reach a desirable result while minimizing animosity between the parties, especially when children are involved. Our attorneys will work closely with you to identify issues, understand your needs and objectives, and explore settlement alternatives.

We understand the significant costs involved in litigation and always strive to reach the most favorable settlement on behalf of our clients whenever possible, but if we cannot achieve our clients' goals by negotiation, our Family Law attorneys are fully prepared to represent your interests in court, and through all the stages of litigation, including trial and appeals.
